HIDING. ROSA GOES TO JAIL. Four

The Pythoness Refuses to Leave the Her Wedding with William Hoffman Denmark's Hold.

Explores Her Hiding Place.

Proved to Be Port-Holes.

Mrs. Python Sebal, the striped lady who sailed from the West Africa Gold Coast, is still occupying warm and comfortable quarters somewhere in the neighborhood of the stoke hole of the National line steamship Denmark, which is now lying at the West Houston street pier.

Capt. Rigby and Engineer Baxter have done their level best to induce their objec-tionable tenant to vacate her apartments, but she is evidently not disposed to yield to any of their blandishments.

She is perfectly contented to remain where

She is perfectly contented to remain where she is so long as the temperature is kept up to the 125 degree mark, which is the average level of the stokehole atmosphere.

Gresse and bilge water are nothing to her, as long as she has a nice warm place to coll herself up in and go to sleep, to dream, perchance, of Africa's sunny shores and golden strands, with an unlimited supply of tender, juncy Guinea pigs and succulent monkeys.

She has not had anything to eat now for three weeks, but that is nothing.

Capt. Rigby says that he has known of pythons to live for several months without eating. The wear and tear to the physical system of a well-regulated snake is very slight, and as they sleep most of the time brain work is at an absolute standstill.

After a month's map, however, the chances are that an ordinary python will wake up with a ravenous appetite, and then woe bettide the first unfortunate being that omes in its way.

The centain's theory now is that Mrs. Python will water the content of the street of the superior of its way.

The captain's theory now is that Mrs. Python, when she disappeared under the donkey engine two weeks ago, found a dry, pleasant little corner against one of the big boliers, and was delighted with the change from the straw box in the cook's galley, and that she immediately settled down for a regular snake straw box in the cook's galley, and that she immediately settled down for a regular snake map.

She is bound to show herself again some time, but to reach her in her present quarters would be a risky if not impossible undertaking.

This morning the engineer and several of his sasistants were at work down in the stokehole. They had taken up one of the heavy iron plates of the floor and were peering carefully around in the dark space underneath, with aid of oil lamps.

The Evenne Wonld reporter, who was present, volunteered to go down and make an investigation, but the head engineer would not listen to such a proposition.

"You'd get lost in the bilge," he said, even if you didn't get caten up. They say there's nothing a West Coast python likes better for breakfast than a reporter with a striped shirt and wide check trousors. Those spants would wake up all the pythons on the West Coast in the middle of the rainy season. We've got to sail next Saturday, and we don't want any Coroner's cases aboard."

The reporter, however, obtained permission to look into the place and see what he could see. The space underneath was so full of smoke from the oil lamps that at first nothing could be distinguished at a greater distance than three feet. Little particles of soot were floating around and the stench from the bilge-water was villainous.

Casting a glance up towards the forward part of the vessel, however, the attention of the investigator was arrested by the apnearance of two small, beady points of light, which gleamed steadily in the inky blackness of the hold. They seemed to be distant about fifty feet, more or less.

They seemed to have an irresistible power of fascination, and as the observer gazed at tem each one appeared to grow in size and brilliancy till they looked like two full macons.

"What's the matter," exclaimed the engineer as with the help of his assistant he hauled the reporter up from the hole. "A second more and you would have gone head first into the bige."

"There she is," was the faint reply of the rescued explorer.
"What's there?" he asked in a hourse

"The python; look at her eyes."

The engineer ducked his head under the plate and looked in the direction indicated, while his assistants held their breath and looked nervously towards the stairway lead-

THE TOUNGEST LIFE CONVICT.

Twelve Years Old and Serving Time as the Murderer of His Sister.

SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD. PRANKFORT, Ky., July 24.-Probably the youngest State prison convict in the United States, and certainly the youngest doing a life term, is Sinnville Combs, the first year of whose sentence has just expired.

He is now twelve years old, and has been much benefited, physically and mentally, by his prison life.

He is how tweive years old, and has been much benefited, physically and mentally, by his prison life.

When first arrested the lad had never heard of God, knew nothing of heaven, and had never seen a school-house. He can now read and write and talks like a bright, intelligent boy. He does not seem to mind his imprisonment. His crime was a terrible one, though he never has appeared to realize its enormity.

He and his little sister, aged two years, were in the house together alone. When the little tot started to crawl across the floor the boy picked up a stove lid and mashed her skull with it. He then threw the body in the Brenacc, intending to purn it.

This process of cremation was too slow, and he pulled it out and carried it to a small stream near the house, throwing it it. When the little one's body was found Sinaville admitted that he killed her.

A blaze enveloped her body from the feet to the waist. Mrs. Elliott set amed and ran to her husband, who sprang from the bed and threw a blanket around her.

He was rolling her on the floor smothering the flames, when the neighbors ran in attracted by his wife's screams, and rendered help.

Mrs. Elliott was terribly burned, but there are hopes for her recovery. Her husband was burned and bisstered on arms and legs in his efforts to save her. The firemen were called, but the house did not eatch fire.

A Pair of Gleaming Eyes Which The Unhappy Lovers Shed Bitter Tears in Court.

The wedding day was fixed. Rosa left her place and came over to the Bowers Savings Bank to get the money she had on deposit, amounting to over $400.

Putting her money into a hand-bag the girl entered a Third avenue car. A young man followed her and soon had the bag. The robbery was reported to Chief of Police Murphy. He sent the girl to Inspector Byrnes, but no clue to the money has been obtained.

The robbery prevented the prospective bride from buying her wedding outfit.

The lovers brooded over the fate that prevented them from becoming man and wife, but Rosa refused to get married unless she could be well dressed.

She hit upon a scheme which she thought would help them out of the difficulty. The girl knew her former mistress had a good wardrobe. She could see no reason why she could not take a few dresses, unbeknown to Mrs. Van Antwerp, and then get married.

Following out her pan, Rosa went quietly down an alley, early yesterday morning, and Following out her pian, Rosa went quietly down an alley, early yesterday morning, and reached the kitchen door while the Van Antwerp family were asleep.

A pane of glass in the window near the door was broken out. The girl put her hand through, slid back the bolt and opened the door. She crept softly upstairs to the closet where she knew the dresses were hanging, took three gowns and crept back down the stairs and out into the darkness.

Shortly afterwards Mr. Van Antwerp smelled smoke. He traced it to the closet and found his wife's clothing aftre.

This led to the discovery that the house had been entered.

The case was put in the hands of Detective Holtic, who found Rose and William together about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. She were one of the dresses she had stolen and was promptly arrested and locked up.

The girl cried bitterly while in court. Hoffman sat near the door, and a tear rolled down his cheek when he realized that instead of becoming his wife Rosa must go to prison. She had on one of the dresses she had stolen, a brown silk.

The fair prisoner was held for trial. No bail was fixed, and she was taken to jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

FLIES AMONG THE QUAKERS. PHILADELPHIA HAS A PLAGUE SIMILAR TO THAT OF DUBUQUE.

PRILADELPHIA. July 24.—The sidewalks in parts of the city were covered this morning with the remains of myriad flies, the result of a most singular visitation of last evening.

The flies were cream-colored, with brown ots on their wings. They came in squads.

said the engineer, after taking a deliberate observation of the premises.

And so it proved.

The nerves of the reporter, however, were too much shattered to permit of any further investigation, and it required several minutes airing on deck and a dose from the captain's medicine chest to recover from the effects of the bilge water.

The air around the western side of the public buildings was as dense with the pests as though a driving rainstorm was raging. People ran through the swarms with lowered heads and beat them away from their nostrils with hats, fans and newspapers.

JAMES WHITE DIED SHORTLY AFTER BEING STRUCK BY YOUNG GIDDINGS.

The Two Boys Quarrelled, and Giddings Struck White on the Side of the Hend with His Hand-The Blew Not Hevere But White Died Soon After - A Post-Mortem to Be Held.

Albert Giddings, nineteen years old, was arraigned before Justice Kenua, in Brooklyn, this morning, on the charge of homicide in killing James White, aged eighteen years, by striking him with his fist on the right side of the head yesterday during a quarrel about the possession of a song-book. Giddings was held without bail to await the result of an autopsy by Dr. Shepard.

Capt. McKelvey learned from the boys in the neighborhood that Giddings and White had been companions for years, and when they met yesterday at the corner of Myrtle avenue and Raymond street White reminded Giddings that he had loaned him a song book and asked him to return it.

Giddings good-naturedly bantered White about the book until the latter became irri-tated, and a quarrel ensuing, Giddings struck White on the side of the head with his open hand.

White did not return the blow, but shortly afterwards went home and complained to his mother of a severe pain in the head, and also telling her that Giddings struck him.
